

Parents
Standing
Together

Youth Gambling: Real Risk, Real Support

If you just discovered your child is gambling—
or you think they might be—start here.

You're probably feeling a storm of emotions right now—fear, anger, confusion, maybe that strange numbness when reality doesn't feel real yet. We've been exactly where you are.

Take a breath.
You're not alone,
and this is not your fault.

Parents Navigating Together

WHAT TO DO RIGHT NOW WHEN YOU
FIND OUT YOUR CHILD IS GAMBLING

Here's what to focus on first:

1. Pause before you act

Your instinct is to confront them immediately. We get it—we did the same thing. But coming in hot usually backfires. Give yourself an hour, a walk, or a phone call to someone who won't judge. Let the first wave pass so you can approach from "I want to understand" instead of "I need to make this stop."

CLICK TO LEARN MORE

2. Protect your finances—today

We know—you came here to help your child, and we're going to get there. But this step can't wait. This isn't about mistrust. It's about removing the fuel while your child gets help.

- Lock up credit cards, checkbooks, and account info
- Freeze your credit with Equifax, Experian, and TransUnion
- Limit their access to cash and payment apps

CLICK TO LEARN MORE

My son taught me that panic makes it worse. Pausing helped me choose better words — and protecting our finances helped him face reality.

SUZANNE - MOM OF 27-YEAR-OLD

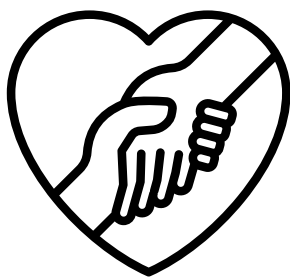

3. Don't bail them out

This is brutal, but important: paying off their debt or smoothing over consequences keeps the cycle going. It teaches them that gambling doesn't have real consequences—and takes away their motivation to change. Stay connected. Stay loving. But let natural consequences do their teaching.

CLICK TO LEARN MORE

4. Get support for yourself

You can't do this alone—and you shouldn't have to. Connecting with other parents who've been through this means you can ask questions, learn what's worked (and what hasn't), and stop feeling like you're the only one.

Find links to our online communities and virtual support group meetings on the last page.

CLICK TO LEARN MORE

The normal rules of fatherhood went out the window. I needed to be educated about the disease before I could help my son.

VIC, FATHER OF 20-YEAR-OLD

5. When you're ready, have the conversation

Lead with curiosity, not confrontation. Ask "Help me understand what's been going on" instead of "What were you thinking?" For most young people, gambling isn't really about the money—it's about escaping stress or numbing hard feelings. You don't need all the answers right now. Just keep the door open.

CLICK TO LEARN MORE

6. Find professional help

Your child needs someone who understands gambling specifically—and you do too. A therapist can help you understand and process what is happening and learn how to support your child without losing yourself. Start here:

- Find a certified counselor
 - ICGC Certification means trained for gambling disorder
- Psychology Today
 - Choose your location and add filters for gambling & addiction
- Your state's gambling helpline
 - Call your helpline or 1-800-MY-RESET

CLICK TO LEARN MORE

Not only did our son need help, but we did too—working with a therapist helped us navigate this disease together.

JENA, MOM OF 22-YEAR-OLD

YOU ARE NOT ALONE

You don't have to figure this all out today. Take a breath. This is a lot to take in, and none of it is easy. Just take the next step—whichever one feels possible right now.

We've been where you are, and we're here to help you through it.

— Parents Standing Together

Ready to connect and learn more?

Speak to a Parent Navigator

- Get our free Welcome Packet
- Be connected with a parent who is also on this journey
- email hello@parentsstandingtogether.org to be connected

Learn More About What Is Happening and What To Do

- Find free resources on our website, parentsstandingtogether.org
- If you would like a deeper dive, find our course, written by parents, for parents at learn.parentsstandingtogether.org/plt-course

Join Our Online Communities

- Ask questions, share your story, find parents who get it
- facebook.com/groups/parentsstandingtogether
- Use your real name or a “display name” on ffc.getevive.com

Come to a Parent Support Meeting

- You don't have to talk; just listen if that's easier
- Get the Zoom link on Facebook, Evive, or email us at hello@parentsstandingtogether.org

